

Abstract

This report presents a case of postoperative histoplasmosis endophthalmitis with multimodal imaging and histopathology. The patient was not from an endemic area and did not show signs of systemic infection. Diagnostic and treatment methods which led to improved and preserved visual function are discussed.