

Stevens Johnson Syndrome in Children: Consider Monitoring for Bronchiolitis Obliterans

Lauren M. Carpenter¹, Jason P. Weinman MD², Yeva Aleksanyan³, Alix K. Mizoue⁴, Robin R. Deterding MD¹, Deborah R. Liptzin MD MS¹

Abstract

We reviewed patients with Stevens Johnson Syndrome (SJS) evaluated at Children's Hospital Colorado and investigated the occurrence of bronchiolitis obliterans (BO). Approximately 9% of SJS patients developed BO. Pediatric hospitalists should consider monitoring SJS patients for BO, especially patients with recurrent SJS and patients treated with mechanical ventilation.