Stevens Johnson Syndrome in Children: Consider Monitoring for Bronchiolitis Obliterans

Lauren M. Carpenter<sup>1</sup>, Jason P. Weinman MD<sup>2</sup>, Yeva Aleksanyan<sup>3</sup>, Alix K. Mizoue<sup>4</sup>, Robin R. Deterding MD<sup>1</sup>, Deborah R. Liptzin MD MS<sup>1</sup>

Abstract

We reviewed patients with Stevens Johnson Syndrome (SJS) evaluated at Children's Hospital Colorado and investigated the occurrence of bronchiolitis obliterans (BO). Approximately 9% of SJS patients developed BO. Pediatric hospitalists should consider monitoring SJS patients for BO, especially patients with recurrent SJS and patients treated with mechanical ventilation.